We fully support the identification of ETS as a toxic air contaminate. Tobacco smoke has been the cause of numerous deaths in our extended family. Thank you for taking this important step to further protect public health in California.

Comment:

This materials bearing on this issue seem to contain a curious mixture of science, guesstimizations and pure fallacies. Do you have links to any discrete, empirical, preferably-duplicated, real-world studies concerning the causative effect of tobacco use and lung cancer? I cannot find a single (supportable) one!

I can find plenty concerning diesel and other industrial fumes. I can find plenty establishing the causative relationship between tobacco use and emphysema. But zip for the same to lung cancer.

Likewise, I can find no supported evidence for causation between ETS and any disorder.

Many years ago, when I set up a web site for a county science fair, one of the students asked me to find such a study for him so he could come up with a project aimed at winning that county's new tobacco-related project award. I've written everyone from WHO to NIH to the EPA and on and on. None of them can come up with an empirical, real-world study that eliminates any other possible causative contaminants in the air.

Thanks!
