Comment:

Dear Air Resources Board member,

Please adopt ambitious greenhouse gas reduction targets for SB 375. I would like to see my community become more walkable, bikable and less congested, and I would like to see more reliable transit options for all residents.

I understand that one of the best ways to ensure communities grow in a sustainable way is to set ambitious greenhouse gas reduction goals at the regional level. I recognize that it may take a little time for the reductions to take effect, but the benefits will be invaluable to my community for generations to come.

Sincerely,

Annie Armstrong, California resident

Dear Air Resources Board member,

Please set the bar high for greenhouse gas reduction targets for SB 375. We have an opportunity to incentivize communities to be more walkable and less congested, with more transit and housing options for all residents. It's also an opportunity to spur green technology and innovation in California.

I understand that one of the best ways to ensure communities grow in a sustainable way is to set ambitious greenhouse gas reduction goals at the regional level. I recognize that it may take a little time for the reductions to take effect, but the benefits will be invaluable to the Bay Area for generations to come.

I am writing to urge you to adopt ambitious greenhouse gas reduction targets for SB375. I would like to see my community of Oakland become more walkable and less congested in particular, and I want to see more BART and AC Transit service, and housing options for all residents. As someone who does not own a car and who relies on transit, this is essential for me and others like me who seek to reduce our carbon footprint.

Please set goals that reflect the seriousness of the challenge to the planet. The goals we set now will make life much much easier when the shit really hits the fan. So if you set goals that will affect land use, commuting, energy consumption, etc, then California will be in much better shape in 20 years. It takes years to change patterns in energy use, so please start aggressively NOW.

Dear Air Resources Board member,

Please adopt ambitious greenhouse gas reduction targets for SB 375. One of the best ways to ensure communities grow in a sustainable way is to set ambitious greenhouse gas reduction goals at the regional level. I recognize that it may take a little time for the reductions to take effect, but the benefits will be invaluable to my community for generations to come.

I've taken my first steps by purchasing and exclusively driving an all-electric vehicle (Toyota Rav4-EV) since 2002. In 2008, I installed a 4.8kW solar system on the roof-top of my house to supply 95% of my electrical household and driving needs.

I know that not all Californians have the opportunity or finances to take the steps that I have taken. By adopting strong greenhouse gas reductions, all products for housing and transportation will move more quickly to become more sustainable. Without a strong statement about greenhouse gas reductions, we may lose out on an opportunity to move in this important direction. We all know that California had often lead the nation in environmental regulations.

We need you, the California Air Resources Board, to stay strong and adopt ambitious targets so that the important work can continue. We can't stop now, we must set the example for industry and the nation. With strong regulations in place and a commitment to stick to such regulations, it will also allow the private sector to step up and develop technologies and bring products to market.

Sincerely,

Kimberly Rogers

Dear Chairman Nichols,

I encourage the California Air Resources Board to support public health by establishing the most ambitious regional greenhouse gas reduction targets possible under SB375. 　

Strong targets will signal the need restrain urban sprawl and create sustainable higher density communities throughout California where residents have healthier, physically active walking, biking or transit alternatives to driving. 　

Improving California's land use and transportation planning processes to reduce our dependency on driving offers a wide range of benefits to our communities. Along with reducing our contributions to catastrophic climate change, promoting active transportation and the use of public transportation will reduce air pollution-related illnesses, inactivity-related illnesses such as obesity, diabetes, cardiovascular disease, and depression, deaths and injuries from automobile crashes, as well as social isolation, poverty, and interpersonal violence.　

Please continue to support public health in all these ways by establishing strong regional greenhouse gas targets.

I think we must realize that technology alone is not going to resolve our greenhouse gas issues and that we must encourage people to change their lifestyles in a significant to become less auto-dependent and so on. This is our chance to start doing just that.

Sincerely,

California resident
