Dear Jensen,

California claims to be a leader in environmental issues. That claim to be true has to be defined by right action. Cap and trade is not right action. It flies in the face of social justice, negatively effecting poor communities caught in urban areas.

It make more sense to focus all our energies on emission reductions made directly at the source of pollution, and we need to do that now.

The latest news about our air quality being effected by China's emissions speaks volumes why we here in California need to lead the world in action and approach in creating a sustainable environment for the peoples, as well as the animals and plants, of this planet.

No Cap and Trade or tax credits!

We are all watching carefully, do not think that we are distracted by what is happening at the National level. We are aware of recent developments around water quality and food production. Represent the interests of the people both locally and globally. They are one and the same.

Sincerely, Mara Duncan

Please enact meaningful protections for our climate through direct source reductions, rather than market schemes like cap and trade.

Sincerely,

mara duncan
